August 2025

August 1st Pop-Up Pub

Welcome

A very warm welcome to Pam, Nick and Zeus who recently moved into Ivy Cottage. They have already sampled the Pop-up Pub and Midsummer Madness and are finding walks for Zeus, so...settling in well. Hope they are enjoying our Cratfield life. More to look forward to below....

Many apologies for last month's welcome, what happened between proof reading and printing I can't imagine. Gremlins! This is what it should have said..... Yeah, sorry about that, quality control failure on my part. Pete

*A very warm welcome to 'RED' who has recently joined Dan, Linzi and Nell He's a very handsome boy. I'm sure Nell will be showing him the ropes for next year's 'Best Cratfield Dog'!
And, a little belatedly, welcome also to 'MOZZIE' who has recently come to live with Rebecca, Robert and Bug. As I haven't seen him yet I can't comment on his looks, but I'm sure he is equally loved! Just met him, he's handsome too!
Sue (Ed.)*

More dog news....

*Roxanne sadly left us and crossed the Rainbow Bridge 1st July 2025 aged 10. Myles a black Labrador (10 weeks) has now filled the gap and will soon be seen out walking in the village.

Acoustic Night

I now have all the performers lined up for the Acoustic Night Special on 18th October. As previously mentioned - I am not going to reveal who will be singing/playing - it will be a surprise so if you want to know - you will have to come. Suffice it to say that they are semi-pro and professional musicians and several of them are national/international musicians! All the proceeds will go to St Elizabeth Hospice. Keep an eye on the magazine and village posters to let you know when you can reserve your place - pay on the door but you MUST reserve your place first. Details of how to do this will follow in next months magazine.

Murder at Cratfield Towers

(tongue firmly in cheek) is the latest in our Cratfield Talks this October.

When I'm not Natalie of Field Cottage, her with the dogs, I'm Natalie Meg Evans (writing historical fiction) and Kay Blythe (serving up murder mystery). My talk is a guide to plotting a twisty murder mystery set in a thoroughly Gothic country house with an entirely fictitious cast. We'll take a magnifying glass to the early days of murder mystery, and I'll share insider tips on building suspense, clues, and surprise endings... all without offending (or murdering) the neighbours.

Join us on October 25th at Cratfield Village Hall. Entry on the door is £6.00, with light refreshments and a bar. Bring your curiosity and perhaps your own murderous ideas (strictly fictional, of course).

Book through the village hall email address: cratfieldvillagehall@gmail.com
Please use this email booking process (unless you really can't) as this allows us to keep tabs on our numbers and ensures no double-bookings.

I look forward to seeing you all...

Or do I? (Evil laugh)

HISTORY CORNER

The Story of a Country Beer House – The Wheatsheaf, Ubbeston

The Wheatsheaf c1955 by kind permission of Mike King

The only known beer house in Ubbeston apparently started life in one of the two parish cottages on the opposite side of the B1117 to the present-day houses: Wheatsheaf and Wheatsheaf Cottage. We can find references back as far as the beginning of the 19th century to a beer house in one of the parish cottages, possibly called The 'Trowel and Hammer'. By 1844 it had become 'The Wheatsheaf' and sold spirits for a time as well as beer. The local name for the establishment was 'The Shuff', rhyming with 'woof'. Evidence points to it having moved across the road probably in the 1880s. It continued to be known as 'The Wheatsheaf' and remained as a beer house till closure in 1960.

Along with many other local pubs and beer houses 'The Wheatsheaf' has a chequered history. The original premises were managed by the church wardens, who recorded that the parish had repaired damages to the building after 14 years' lease as a beer house and newspaper reports point to some undesirable behaviour. 'The Wheatsheaf Inn' was described in 1855 in The Suffolk Chronicle as 'an excellent free roadside Public House with Blacksmith's Shop attached, now in full trade with a Brewing Plant complete, and every convenience to carry on a profitable trade'. Then it was reported in The Halesworth Times and The East Suffolk Advertiser in 1858 as having its license renewal refused because of misconduct on the part of the applicant, John Knott. The complaint was from the churchwarden, Mr George, objecting to the 'immorality' of the landlord and also that 'such public house was not needed in the parish'. The vicar, Rev R James, added that the landlord was an adulterer, who allowed drunkenness in the pub on a Sunday.

In 1861, three years later, The Suffolk Chronicle wrote that John Knott of Ubbeston, 'beer house keeper', was in trouble once again. He was fined £50 for having in his 'cellar, duly entered for the keeping and storing of beer, quantities of spirits...'

It would seem the church officers became anxious about the church's association with drinking and misbehaviour so 'The Wheatsheaf' was moved to its new premises across the road. The old premises became a lecture room and the vicar in 1882 was reported as trying to inaugurate a village club 'in the hope of promoting the moral and social improvements of the working men and youths of the parish...' The various articles purchased for the innocent amusement of the members were exhibited – dominoes, draughts, solitaire, mosaic puzzles etc., together with some newspapers'. By 1888 there was a temperance meeting and the 'somewhat small lecture-room of the parish was crowded with an audience of villagers to hear addresses on temperance...[with] an interval of ten minutes for fruit'.

Meanwhile across the road in 1883, Framlingham Weekly News reported that 'A most beneficial alteration has been made in connection with the postal service in this parish. Hitherto the letters have been left at the Wheat Sheaf beerhouse, which was considered by some of the parishioners to be a most unfit place to have their valuables deposited'.

And troubles continued. In 1895 EADT reported from the Halesworth Petty Sessional Division, Court House, Halesworth, that there had been complaints about 'the conduct of the Wheatsheaf Beerhouse at Ubbeston'.

At the time of the Beer House's closure in 1960 The Suffolk Chronicle & Mercury spoke of its quiet end: 'At one time the Wheatsheaf had a darts club, but this is a thing of the past. Now the house has been closed to the public for the last time. The end was quiet. The last opening was on Sunday evening, but there was little stock to clear, for the greater part had been sold on Saturday night.' Or in the words of the last publicans' grandson, Mike King, 'The pub was drank dry by the locals'.

As a little fun because of my mistake with the printer last month and because there is a gap and nature abhors a vacuum... Who can figure this out?

Getting to know the Russians

I had intended to finish these stories with the end of my regular sea-going life, but the Editor has told me that I have to continue, so here we are again.

About two years after leaving Ark Royal, I found myself appointed in 1995 as Assistant Chief of the Naval Staff, effectively the executive officer of the Navy and Admiralty Boards, head of the Naval Staff and the First Sea Lord's deputy and "go-fer."

Now it so happened that this coincided with the collapse of the Soviet Union and a desire on both sides of the former Iron Curtain¹ to reset relationships – a desire which sadly eventually came to nothing for which, in my humble opinion, both sides share the responsibility. However, in the period 1992-1997, there were a number of initiatives aimed at improving the relationship with Russia, and visits by each nation's warships to the other. In one of these initiatives I, as Assistant Chief of the Naval Staff, was "detailed off" to sign an amendment to an existing international treaty between Russia and NATO on the avoidance of collisions between NATO and Russian warships exercising on the High Seas.

So, one Sunday evening, I found myself at Heathrow waiting, with a small team of MoD people, in the Heathrow VIP suite to greet the Russian Rear Admiral, Michael Yermilov and his small staff. We exchanged pleasantries in our respective languages before they were whizzed off to the Russian embassy for the night.

The next day we met in a meeting room in the MoD, dressed in full fig (he had a lot more medals than I did), with national flags set behind the table, photographers poised to capture the great moment, and a first-class interpreter who deserves a few words. His skill was astonishing, as the Admiral and I talked to each other without any concessions. He even sat behind us at lunch and managed to keep up with the flow of conversation just as if we were talking directly together. I was absolutely bowled over by his ability – easily the greatest memory of the event.

The "treaty signing" itself was, despite the ceremonial that surrounded it because of our wish to make the Russians feel that we really wished to be friendly, not as exciting as you might think. It concerned some sub-section of a paragraph in an annex, and today I cannot even remember what it was about, but I am sure that it was of great importance and went a long way towards preventing collisions at sea. No doubt both Admiral Yermilov and I were sure we had saved the world.

There followed what was always the most dangerous part of any of these meetings with the Russian navy. After the lunch, vodka was served, and there commenced a seemingly endless string of toasts. Each one required you to empty in one the small glass of vodka in front of you which was immediately refilled. Toasts were given alternately and might have gone on for a long time, well beyond my capacity for vodka. It taxed one's imagination to think quickly of a new toast to give, so there were sometimes lengthy silences between toasts, before inspiration struck. Fortunately, Admiral Yermilov had to leave earlier than he might have wished to catch his return flight to Moscow (and doubtless to report to his embassy before leaving). Whilst I was beginning to feel a little woozy, he looked spry and ready to continue had time allowed – he was obviously much more practiced at toast drinking than I was.

This was the first of several interactions that I had with the Russian Navy (all of them ending with lengthy vodka toasts) during the relatively short period when we both tried to improve relations, before eventually Vladimir Putin took over in Russia. All of them were interesting and usually jolly and enjoyable events. Sadly, things eventually reverted to the cold hostility that preceded and followed this period. Still in my experience, whenever sailors of both nations, or for that matter sailors of any nation, met together, they invariably found that they shared much common ground; they all shared, and greatly respected, the same unrelenting enemy that has always confronted all sailors since time began, namely the rapidly changing and sometimes very frightening nature of the sea itself. I don't suppose that this has changed very much, nor that it ever will.

Jeremy Blackham

1. There was before the USSR collapsed, a genuine iron curtain, a daunting and scary double fence, protected on the Soviet side by land-mined fields, guardhouses and surveillance towers every half mile or so, from the German Baltic coast to the Swiss mountains, with many Russian trained permanently on their side and on no man's land. It was intended as much to keep East Germans in as to keep NATO out.

In Cratfield, I know many residents are worried about two very practical issues: road safety around our schools, and the lack of reliable local bus services. These concerns come up time and again, in my school visits, surgeries, coffee mornings and when I'm out knocking on doors.

One of the most immediate concerns is the safety of our children on the way to and from school. Many families in Cratfield rely on nearby primary schools – so many of which across Suffolk Coastal are situated on or near busy rural roads. I've heard from parents and staff who are concerned about fast traffic, limited signage and a lack of safe places to cross, especially at drop-off and pick-up times.

Working with primary schools in the constituency, I've launched a Parliamentary petition calling for a tailored road safety plan for every primary school in the constituency. That means looking carefully at local speed limits, crossings, pavement access and visibility – all informed by the people who know these roads best.

Separately, I've just launched an online survey on local bus services. I know how difficult it can be in rural and coastal communities when bus routes are cut, services become unreliable, or timetables no longer reflect real life. Whether you still use the bus, used to, or want to but cannot – I would be really grateful if you could take a few minutes to share your experience. The more responses I gather, the stronger the case I can make for improvements – and I'm keen that we shape the solutions together.

Public transport and road safety are not luxuries. Whether it's a schoolchild needing a safe crossing or an older resident trying to stay independent, we need our services and infrastructure to work for everyone.

You can find the bus survey on my website – details below.

Exploring the Scottish Islands – with a collapsible bike!
St Kilda (Population: 0 – last inhabitants evacuated in 1930)
Part 10: Voyage to St Kilda

The Scottish Tourist board can work miracles! When my folding bike was disallowed on a flight to North Ronaldsay (Orkney's most northerly island), it was they who arranged for me to meet a farmer at the airport who was lending me his wife's bicycle for the day! When I called them about getting to the hard-to-reach St Kilda, I was told, "You need Murdo." "Murdo?" "He runs the MV Cuma. He advertises in BBC Wildlife magazine. Get yourself a copy!" And so an itinerary was planned: I revisited several islands I'd seen before and the climax of my trip was to be spending a few days on wondrous St Kilda. With a couple of days to go, and already visiting the islands, I called Murdo just to make sure that all was in place. "Oh, no..." he said quite casually... and then described how I was going to be joined on my trip by a local band (regarded, locally, as 'celebrities') but they, and their retinue, had pulled out, so the trip was cancelled. I was horrified and, in a cold sweat, exclaimed, "But my whole trip up here has been organised around my visit to St Kilda!" Thankfully, he relented once he could hear my anguish: it was back on! When I boarded the Cuma, it meant that we were a small group – just one couple and me. The boat struck me as remarkably small, but there were some compact cabins below decks which gave it a 'Tardis' feel. Up top, there was a kitchen and a semi-enclosed viewing area with benches. Joining the boat on a Saturday evening, somewhere on the western side of the Outer Hebrides, the first part of our voyage took us further down the chain so that we were perfectly adjacent to St Kilda: we took shelter there for the night, ready to strike out early the following morning. The voyage to St Kilda can be notoriously rough, so I took a couple of sea-sickness tablets in preparation: it proved to be a wise move! The boat started to dramatically pitch and roll – and, at times, it seemed to be caught between the two, as if it was twisting itself inside-out. The little curtains alternated between vertical and horizontal as the boat convulsed, and there was the continual sound of kitchen items clanking and dropping to the floor – and the kitchen bin was horizontal, having emptied half its contents on the floor. Lunch was off! My sickness pills made me soporific and I laid horizontal on a bench where, despite the gut-churning drama, I fell into a deep sleep. I then had the rudest of awakenings when the boat pitched downwards so violently, I was left in mid-air, still in my horizontal sleeping position: my descent came to an abrupt end, as I met the deck coming back up again! Thankfully, no harm done. A few hours in, the weather relented as quickly as it had started. The sea calmed to a millpond, the clouds parted to a beautiful blue sky and the sun shone brightly: nature was getting the stage ready for a spectacular show!

As we neared the first islands, we were merely bit parts in an amazing show: Boreray, its two awesome stacs - and then Hirta, Dun and Soay, still 4 miles away, shifted position constantly, one behind the other, as if a God-like hand was moving gigantic pieces of theatre scenery around to impress us. Murdo slowed the boat: the engine became a murmur as if in reverence to the cathedral-like fangs of rock rising vertically above us. The birds were utterly numerous and gannets played their party trick of dropping like darts from incredible heights into the sea below. Having craned our necks and gasped, on we went, sailing across the 4 mile wide remains of the ancient volcano that creates these islands. Slowly, Hirta – where the St Kildans had their homes – came ever closer and the excitement mounted.

Since WW1, there has been a military presence on Hirta: in fact, in 1918, a German submarine surfaced in village bay. The St Kildans were complete strangers to violence of any kind and Finlay MacQueen rowed out in a bid to barter some tobacco - until the submarine's captain announced through a loudhailer (in his best English) that he was about to bombard the island to take out the Navy's wireless station. The islanders took fright, climbing up to ancient hide-holes created by their ancestors when it was necessary to evade pirates. Many shells landed but a lamb was the only casualty. The military presence increased in 1957 when a tracking station was set up to monitor missiles launched from a testing range in Benbecula. The village on Hirta is a little set back, but the military buildings, which are incongruous despite best efforts, are closer to the shore.

As the MV Cuma drew alongside that sunny, Sunday afternoon, we could see 3 personnel on a bench against a building, looking decidedly... sleepy! Murdo muttered, "I bet they've been drinking since Friday evening!"

Hirta: dry-stoned walls and cleits in the foreground, military buildings at the shore, with the island of Dun in the background: the village is to the RH side

Dear Friends,

Here we are in the balmy days or should I say barmy days of summer! The mercury has been up and up and then down to what I remember as the warmest summer days of my childhood! Yes! What a long memory. It reminds me of how hot it was at times in 1975 and then there was the summer of '76 and that was a hot one – perhaps portending what was to come over the next fifty years?

As we enter the time of harvest and abundance, we must spare a thought for our farmers hit by the water shortage. Let us also reflect on blessings, both big and small, and encourage thankful hearts. We might also reflect upon the opportunities that August provides us with in terms of getting together with family and friends and enjoying togetherness, whether through summer gatherings or simply enjoying the longer days. And of course, we can show support to one another as we continue to build strong communities in each of our parishes. We all know that life can be challenging at times, but our faith provides us with the courage to keep on, keeping on! When we notice friends or family struggling, then may we be the first to offer words of encouragement and hope, to extend love and kindness beyond our church community. Perhaps you might find time to reflect with me on Romans 15 v 5 – ‘May the God who gives endurance and encouragement give you the same attitude of mind toward each other that Christ Jesus had.’

Look after one another.

Prayers and blessings,
Revd Chrissie

LAMMAS CELEBRATION

Worlingworth Church - Sunday 3rd August

9.30am HOLY COMMUNION SERVICE

11.00AM LAMMAS CELEBRATION SERVICE

(Refreshments will be served from 1015am and after the celebration service)

WHAT IS LAMMAS

Lammas or ‘Loaf-mass’ is an English feast in origin, as a thanksgiving for the first-fruits of the grain harvest. Traditionally a newly baked loaf from the harvest was presented before God. While the ceremony ceased at the Reformation, reference to Lammas Day continued in the Prayer Book calendar, and the practice has been revived in more recent years.
